‘Blueprints’ reflects importance of construction to local economy

Few industries permeate the local economy as much as construction. Building of commercial or residential structures means employment of thousands of people in Northern Colorado, working directly in architecture, engineering, construction or some related sector.

Thousands more people reap the benefits of the construction industry, including retailers who sell appliances, art, carpet, furniture and much more. Add to that the fact that people directly employed in the construction industry themselves are consumers, spending millions of dollars in stores and restaurants, and depositing money in local banks.

The importance of construction to Northern Colorado's economy makes the industry deserving of its own directory, which you now hold in your hands. The Northern Colorado Business Report previously published Blueprints as a section of our award-winning business newspaper.

Blueprints has done so well that we have converted it to this deluxe format, familiar to users of our Northern Colorado Technology/Manufacturers Directory, our Harvest agribusiness directory and our Northern Colorado M.D. medical directory.

This directory includes listings on approximately 2,200 local companies, as well as recent construction articles and ranked lists from the pages of The Northern Colorado Business Report.

Listings in Blueprints are broken down by subcategory, including Aggregate, Architecture, General Contractors, Engineers, etc.

We are grateful to members of our staff, whose efforts made Blueprints possible, including Lindsay Rockwell, who led our sales efforts. Also indispensable were the research efforts of Chief Researcher Sonoko Bayes and Research Assistant Kris Mascarenes, as well as the design skills of Production Manager Chad Collins and Graphic Designer Jim Schlichting.

Thanks also to our advertisers, who made this edition of Blueprints our top-selling construction directory.

Please remember that such comprehensive research efforts are always imperfect, and errors and omissions are inevitable. If we inadvertently excluded your company, or listed it incorrectly, please let us know, and we'll correct our database immediately. We'll also ensure that your information is correctly listed in the next issue of Blueprints, to be published in early 2004.

Blueprints soon will be available in database format using the DataJoe system on our Web site, www.ncbr.com, and can be purchased on disk in dbase or tab-delimited formats.

We hope that you enjoy Blueprints, and we look forward to any advice and feedback that you, our valued reader, wish to provide.

Construction Management: Teaming up for efficiency and cost savings

"We chose Everitt Commercial Partners because of their construction management experience," said Greg Yancey of Yancey's Foods. "They definitely have saved us money."

Everitt Commercial Partners' Tom Livingston and Stuart MacMillan have over 40 years of combined experience in designing and building retail, office, industrial, medical and hotel facilities throughout northern Colorado.

"As a result," Livingston says, "we have relationships with architects, planners and contractors and can select a team that best fits an owners' project and his needs. By selecting the right team for the job, the entitlement process is simplified and the savings is passed on to owners."

Weekly meetings with owners, construction team and Everitt have smoothed out the process, according to Yancey. "Tom has used his expertise and experience to look out for our best interests," he said. "He saw things we would have missed."

An "owner's perspective" creates value for clients and results from the fact that Tom and Stu have partnered in over 20 commercial projects themselves. This perspective results in improvements in design so that while the project is high quality, it also has flexibility for adaptation and looks closely at long-term operational expense.

"As developers and project managers, we feel we have a role as community builders and therefore try to make all projects we're involved in make our community a better place to live," said Livingston.

Everitt Commercial Partners, LLC provides brokerage, and project management both to in-house and third-party clients. Fifty percent is Everitt Companies-owned and developed projects and 50 percent is to third party owners. Project management service includes design, development, and construction management of commercial and industrial projects.

"Having worked throughout northern Colorado, we are familiar with the permitting and approval process of all cities and municipalities. This allows the process to be achieved in a more timely manner," he said they were hired to expedite the site plan through the City of Fort Collins for approval.

Experience has included projects of varying scopes. At Poudre Valley Hospital's Harmony Campus,

Yancey's Foods hired Everitt to oversee the entire project from sourcing the land to hiring the architect through managing the construction.

Additional third party projects have included the Natural Resources Research Center

(USDA) at the Centre for Advanced Technology, LSI Logic's Harmony Road campus, National Technological University and Technology Labs at the Centre for Advanced Technology, Cytomation at Oakridge, Miner and Miner Engineering in Windsor, Westgate retail center in Windsor and ABB at Oakridge.

Projects have been completed as small as 8000 SF retail in Windsor to 120,000 SF, $20 million office buildings.

STEVE PORTER • THE BUSINESS REPORT

COURTHOUSE RISING — The new Larimer County Courthouse takes shape in downtown Fort Collins. The courthouse is one of several institutional construction projects under way or completed in Northern Colorado in 2002.

2002 WAS BIG YEAR FOR INSTITUTIONAL PROJECTS

But spending cutbacks by the state reined in other buildings

By Sue Lenthe

Institutional construction in Northern Colorado in 2002 was a story of what was started and finished and what might have been had budget woes not intervened.

Larimer County led the way in big projects that got under way in 2002 and are scheduled for completion in 2003. The new Larimer County Fairgrounds in east Loveland is set for completion by September, and a new five-story courthouse will also be finished by summer 2003 in downtown Fort Collins.

It's been a very busy last few years for the county. "Between 1998 and now, my group completed in the neighborhood of $80 million in construction and renovation, and we have almost $100 million active and in the ground right now," said Dave Spencer, the county's facilities director.

Meanwhile, construction projects on the University of Northern Colorado campus are notable for what might have been if the state government hadn't frozen construction funding.

Projects put on hold

UNC saw three major construction projects with total estimated costs of approximately $40 million put on hold in 2002, said Norm Laurence, UNC director of facility planning and construction.

Had it not been for the state's budget troubles, Laurence would likely have been echoing Spencer's assessment of the year.

"It would have been a very big year for us," he said. "We still have quite a bit of work going on right now with projects finishing up, but it would have been a very busy year for us."

2002 on the UNC campus did see construction of a 6,000-square-foot cancer rehabilitation center with an estimated price tag of $1.6 million, Laurence said.

Just when the university will revisit the three cancelled projects depends on the state budget, Laurence said. "It's probably going to be two or three years."

In Loveland, the public construction sector saw comparatively little activity. As of October 2002, the city had issued two building permits for public projects valued at $40,225. Loveland did mark completion of a new police and courts building at 810 E. 10th St., which opened for business on Valentine's Day.

The city of Greeley issued 30 building permits valued at $41,583,721 in its new commercial projects category, which includes institutional construction.

Fort Collins reported no permits issued in its hospital/institutional category during the same period; two permits were issued for public facilities with a value of $1.6 million, and one permit was issued for a parking structure valued at $146,000. Among the public facilities □ permitted in Fort Collins this year is a new swimming pool in City Park with a construction value of $900,000.

Downtown courthouse rises

In downtown Fort Collins, workers are busy with the 153,000-square-foot, five-floor courthouse offices. The courthouse offices are scheduled for completion by mid-2003, Spencer said.

The new facility will house county administrative functions such as the treasurer, clerk and recorder, planning, engineering and building, and county commissioners' offices. All of the county's court functions now are housed a few blocks north in the Larimer County Justice Center completed in 2000.

By November 2003, demolition of the former courthouse building and reconstruction of the site should be complete as well, Spencer said.

"It's been fun building six feet outside their windows. Destroying the old building six feet outside their new windows is going to be fun, too."

As commuters along I-25 have noticed, work is progressing on the events center at the Larimer County Fairgrounds just east of I-25. The centerpiece of The Ranch, as the new fairgrounds complex is now known, will seat between 4,100 and 7,400 people depending on the venue. Projected uses include ice hockey, rodeos, tractor pulls, concerts and ice shows.

The events center isn't the only part of the $61.2 million project under construction. It's simply the most visible. Work has begun on other facilities there as well. The 243-acre site will include two exhibition halls, an indoor arena and two large livestock pavilions, along with ticket booths and a maintenance facility.

Several of Northern Colorado's 2002 institutional construction projects made the Top Projects of 2002 list on McGraw-Hill's Colorado construction.com Web site.

Cancer center in Loveland

The McKee Cancer Center adjacent to Banner Health's McKee Medical Center in Loveland topped the list in the health-care projects category. The 17,000-square-foot cancer treatment center cost approximately $4.1 million and opened in July.

Colorado State University also made the list with its Chemistry/Biological Sciences building project. The $16 million project was completed in August.

Also on the McGraw-Hill list were Greeley's $12.7-million student housing complex called Arlington Park Apartments and a $7 million expansion at the Rawhide power plant in Wellington.

2002 also brought closure to the three-year, $40-million renovation project at Poudre Valley Hospital in Fort Collins. PVH announced completion of the project in mid-November.

The renovation added three new floors, upgraded existing patient-care units, modernized patient rooms and increased the number of patient beds.

The project is likely the last major expansion project for the Lemay campus, said hospital spokesman Gary Kimsey. Construction on the 22-acre campus has become too costly because of building codes, regulations and limited space.

HighCraft Builders

build- solid reputation

Remodeling company growing quickly on customer satisfaction

By Luanne Kadlub

FORT COLLINS — Though the residential building market in Northern Colorado has been hotter than a New Mexico chili the last decade, the home remodeling market has not experienced the same amount of sizzle. For many homeowners, it simply made more financial sense to buy new rather than redo.

But that seems to be changing, and one firm ready to grab the market by the horns is HighCraft Builders, a Fort Collins remodeling firm co-owned by Bryan Soth and Dwight Sailer. The company doubled its revenues from $541,000 in 2000 to $1.2 million in 2001. Projections for 2002 are between $1.8 million and $2 million.

Founded in 1998, HighCraft Builders has eked out a niche with a firm business plan in hand and a mission statement that covers just about everything, from treating each project as if “it were for one of our parents” to “using our heads as much as our backs.”

Both Sailer and Soth bring hands-on experience to their company. Sailer, who grew up in California, apprenticed with custom-home builders in the Carmel, Pebble Beach and Monterey area. When he was ready to strike out on his own as a general contractor, he figured Colorado would be a better location than overgrown — and overbuilt — California.

Soth, on the other hand, pursued his MBA at the University of St. Thomas at Minnesota. Out of economic necessity, he and his wife bought a fixer-upper as their residence and set about remodeling it. “It was too much fun,” he said of working with his hands. “I was doing something concrete.” It was so much fun that the couple bought, remodeled and sold another 10 fixer-uppers in the Minneapolis area.

Remodeling was also a lot more fun than working for a company that imported and distributed medical products, which is where he spent his days after graduation from business school. So he and his wife — for lifestyle reasons — decided to move to Colorado.

STEVE PORTER • THE BUSINESS REPORT

BUSY BUILDERS — Bryan Soth (left) and Dwight Sailer teamed up to create HighCraft Builders in 1998. The Fort Collins-based company specializes in remodeling projects and has grown quickly, doubling its revenues from $541,000 in 2000 to $1.2 million in 2001.

Partnership formed

And that’s where he and Sailer hooked up. Colleagues at a commercial construction firm, Soth and Sailer discovered they each preferred the residential remodeling market. Going into business with someone else went against everything Soth had learned in grad school. “They tell you don’t go into a partnership, the odds are against you, and that it’s more efficient to go out alone.”

Yet both had separate skill sets to bring to the table — Sailer has the construction know-how and Soth has the business savvy — and they felt the partnership would be a good one. Even with that, they recognized □ being compatible partners wasn't enough. They needed to somehow set themselves apart from other remodelers in the area.

One way they achieved that was — instead of operating out of a truck or a home office — they set up shop in an office. First, it was an indistinguishable location off Harmony. Since January 2002, they've been located in a red brick home-cum-office at the corner of Mulberry and Howes. They're in the process of remodeling it, too.

It didn't hurt, they said, when one of their remodeling jobs was just up the street on Mulberry and passers-by were treated to twice the amount of signage — one at the office, the other at the job site.

They've also built up their own work force — from three to 16 in a year's time — and, thanks to a generous benefits packages, turnover is rare. Employees are expected to keep neat and clean appearances and to wear HighCraft shirts while on the job. It's important, the co-owners said, that people who open their homes to workers for any amount of time feel comfortable having them in their house, tearing down walls or putting up new ones.

Growing beyond basement finishes (many of which include upscale home theaters and game rooms) was a difficult process, Soth said. "We got over certain hurdles, and it opened us up to do larger, more extensive projects." That included whole-house remodeling projects and room additions. Soth and Sailer said they like to be involved in the design phase of the project as well as the actual construction.

Word-of-mouth advertising

Though they've tried print advertising, it's home shows and word-of-mouth that has garnered them the most business. That's how they picked up clients Don and Dierdre Cook of Loveland. The Cooks wanted to turn their ho-hum 1963 ranch sitting on Lake Loveland into something that would aesthetically fit in with its surroundings.

"When we put the project out to bid, a lot of contractors came to look but they never got back to us," said Dierdre Cook, principal at Centennial High School in Fort Collins. HighCraft Builders did get back to them, and they got the job. "They redid the entire front of our house," Cook said.

Cedar siding was replaced with stone and stucco, and a front porch with pillars, reminiscent of Mission architecture, was installed. The company also converted a spare bedroom into a home office that opens into the family room and replaced all windows.

"Did our first impressions hold up? They certainly did. They came right in on budget. They are so organized and so precise. If there was any issue, they discuss it before they did anything and had options laid out," said Cook, adding, "We think the world of them."

HighCraft Builders is striving to be the home remodeler of choice for high-end homeowners. That seems to be happening. A fair amount of work is coming out of the tony Ptarmigan subdivision west of Windsor, where homeowners are not only finishing their basements, but tweaking floor plans on the main levels as well.

— Bryan Soth,

In the meantime, the business is right about where it should be, the co-owners say. "We need to grow a little bit, but we want to be careful," Soth said. In five years, they hope to be "very well established in Fort Collins and more involved with larger upscale projects. We want to be one of the foremost high-end remodeling companies," Soth said.

And though the business has become such that Soth and Sailer don't lift their hammers as much as they did in the beginning, both do maintain shops at their homes where they can do as much hands-on work as time allows. "It's not something easily dismissed," Sailer said. "We both love what we're doing."

High Plains Village

offers life in the middle of it all

Huge Centerra housing development has strong environmental focus

By Sue Lenthe

LOVELAND — Just a tick to the northwest of the intersection of U.S. 34 and Interstate 25 — a corner some are calling Northern Colorado's new center — High Plains Village is poised to fill the housing needs of people who want to be right in the middle of it all.

Located within McWhinney Enterprises' Centerra development, High Plains Village is a McStain Neighborhoods product. The long-time Colorado production home builder plans to construct an estimated 1,800 units on 3,000 acres over the next decade.

The development's location places residents within easy reach of employment, recreation and shopping, reflecting McStain's holistic approach in creating High Plains Village, said Jeff Kingsbury, vice president of sales and marketing.

"It's really looking at the neighborhood as a whole. That's really how we're approaching the High Plains Village neighborhood. It's really a long-term investment for us. We're not just building houses, we're creating a place for people to live and work and shop and play and learn."

Parks and open space abound

Descriptions of High Plains Village are liberally seasoned with amenities, not the least of which are parks and open space. "Probably the most important thing for folks, besides the product, is we'll have eight miles of trails and 10 parks," said Georgette Vigil, community affairs manager for McStain Neighborhoods.

In fact, Vigil said, the parks and open space that High Plains Village promises sold her.

"I'm relocating from Greeley. I've only lived there three years, but I'm willing to relocate so I can partake of all the amenities this community offers."

Vigil said that homeowners in the development are never more than five minutes from a park. The roster of parks will also include one offleash dog park.

"The idea within this community is that you could essentially do a lot of things here," Vigil said, pointing to parks, the adjacent work, shopping and entertainment opportunities offered by Centerra, and easy access to Fort Collins, Greeley, Longmont, Boulder and Denver, thanks to the confluence of two of the region's major highways.

High Plains Village also speaks to McStain Neighborhoods' emphasis on green building and sustainability, Vigil said.

A 275-acre open-space area with an environmental center — an uncommon concept in new residential development — are situated at the center of the development. The center, actually a non-profit environmental education center, has as its mission exploration of "the connection between the built and the natural environment," said Ripley Heintz, executive director.

McWhinney Enterprises and McStain Neighborhoods donated the land and operating expenses to launch the High Plains Environmental Center. In addition, a permit fee on every residential and commercial structure in Centerra will build an endowment fund to provide perpetual operating funds, Heintz said.

Educational facility

The environmental center will serve as an educational facility for High Plains Village and the community at large. It also will steward the open-space lands in the development, which encompass two reservoirs.

The center, which opened in February, includes exhibits, displays and demonstrations aimed at teaching people about the interface between human development and the natural world.

While its underlying mission revolves around issues of sustainability, Heintz said she hopes to steer clear of the abstract and away from "eco-guilt" by providing information neighbors and community members can use in their daily lives.

"People can come here and learn about composting and energy-efficient lighting and water conservation and energy conservation and recycled building materials. If they're going to build a house here, we can talk to them about why we use pop-bottle carpets or milk-based paint for air quality."

Model homes within the development show off some of those products as well. And McStain will take that concept even a step further, □ building an actual house to test emerging green building techniques and products.

Because improving the durability and energy and resource efficiency of houses is a focus at McStain, the builder will construct a Discovery House at High Plains Village late next year, Kingsbury said.

“Part of what we try to do is monitor that house to see how it operates once it’s completed. We’ll keep it for a period of time and study it and see how it operates as a home.”

Four housing products

High Plains Village offers four housing products, with units ranging in price from about $130,000 to the mid- $200,000s, Vigil said.

At the low end of that price range are one-, two- and three-bedroom courtyard-style condominiums. “They are unique in that they have a green-space, giving them a townhouse feel,” Vigil said.

Townhouses at High Plains Village range in price from $150,000 to the mid- $200,000s.

Next up is a cottage series. These smaller, single-family homes feature traditional architectural styles such as craftsman, farmhouse and colonial that reflect traditional Loveland architectural styles, Vigil said. The cottage homes start at $199,000, with the largest coming in at about 1,864 finished square feet, not including the basement.

High Plains Village also features single-family homes starting in the mid- $200,000 range that are up to 2,800 finished square feet, not including basements.

Jeff Graindo, McStain Neighborhoods regional construction manager, consumer confidence is increasing overall in the market, and people are certainly very interested in what we’re doing up at High Plains Village.”

said the first building permits at High Plains Village were pulled in May 2001. Build out will depend on sales and the economy but is estimated to occur within 10 years.

So far, 15 units at High Plains Village are occupied, Graindo said. McStain has 24 condo units, 24 townhome units and 15 to 16 single-family homes under construction.

Kingsbury said that McStain Neighborhoods has been pleased with the pace of sales at High Plains Village. “I think

HUGE churches part of growing trend

Region seeing more "mega" churches with 1,000-plus members

By Sue Lenthe

LOVELAND — Resurrection Fellowship at 6502 E. Crossroads Boulevard in Loveland resembles a small city.

With a preschool that draws nearly 100 children and a school for children in grades K through 8 that enrolls some 200 more, most weekdays finds hundreds of children and their parents coming and going.

On weekends, the small city swells. The 85,000-square-foot church draws about 3,000 people to Saturday and Sunday services. And if the full church membership showed up at one time, some 3,500 to 4,000 would gather, according to associate pastor Barry Palser.

In many ways, Resurrection Fellowship reflects the Northern Colorado-southern Wyoming region from which it draws. Growing numbers of people drive to the church just east of Interstate 25 from throughout the area, including Cheyenne, Estes Park, Denver, Greeley, Fort Morgan, Fort Collins and Loveland.

Growing trend

And as the one of the region's first "mega" churches, Resurrection Fellowship also reflects a trend that has gathered steam both locally and nationally over the past two decades.

Since the late 1970s when current senior pastor John Stocker first came to Loveland, the church has grown explosively from its original 40-member congregation. "In the last year, we've actually grown by 500," Palser said.

To accommodate this growth, the church is growing its physical plant. In May 2002, Resurrection Fellowship began construction on an approximately 55,000-square-foot addition.

"The reason we're doing this is not because we're trying to grow," Palser said. "We're trying to keep up with the growth." The church preschool, for instance, started three years ago with 35 children. Last year, it drew 65, and this year's enrollment nearly tripled the original.

The expansion project, estimated to cost between $3.2 million to $3.5 million, will house additional storage, more classroom space and a gymnasium/auditorium facility. "Then, if that's not enough, we have a full baseball and soccer field that we are building just to the southeast," Palser said.

Resurrection Fellowship, or "Rez" as its members and staff have nicknamed the church, hopes to expand its school into a full K-12 program. Along with that, Palser said, the church would like to build a quality high school athletic program and eventually enter the Colorado High School Athletic Association.

"We have dreams like everyone else where we could one day win a state title for Rez," Palser said.

Average church has 150 members

Compared to the average American church, which Palser said typically has a membership of about 150, Resurrection Fellowship is flat-out huge. According to a Faith Communities Today study conducted by the Hartford Institute for Religion Research, very large congregations such as Rez are seen as trendsetters in the contemporary Christian world.

But despite their trendsetting, these churches — dubbed "mega churches" by the study — represent less than 1 percent of the total number of congregations in any denomination.

In its database, the study lists several Colorado mega churches. Most, located in the metro Denver area, average memberships of about 4,000. Northern Colorado, however, is home to several large churches not mentioned in the study. In addition to Resurrection Fellowship, they include LifeBridge Christian Church in Longmont and First Christian Church, Faith Evangelical Free Church and Timberline Church in Fort Collins. Faith Evangelical Free Church is in the midst of constructing a new church on South Shields Street.

The Faith Communities Today study found the phenomenon of mega churches to be both old and new, with 57 percent of the churches □ surveyed founded before 1961. Timberline Church in Fort Collins — one of the biggest new mega churches in the region — was founded in 1921, said Jon Cook, pastor and church business administrator.

In July, the church moved to a new 100,000-square-foot facility at 2908 Timberline Road, changing its name from First Assembly of God to Timberline Church. Total cost of the project was $18 million, which includes a 1,400-seat auditorium, a 400-seat mini-auditorium, 24 classrooms, an art center, resource center and café-coffee shop.

Moving from a sanctuary that seated 650 to one that seats 1,400, the church has experienced a lot of growth, Cook says. About 6,000 people call Timberline their home church. Three weekend services each week draw an average of 4,000 people.

The building is only part of that growth, however, Cook said. “Initially, it’s a draw. But I think in the long run the thing that really brings people is people. People reaching people.”

Describing the church as Biblically based, Cook said: “Our mission is ‘Let love live.’ We practice that through our lives, here in the church and throughout the community.”

Supersizing part of modern America

The mega church trend is a movement that fits with Americans’ penchant for super-sizing everything from French fries to vehicles to shopping malls, experts say.

With thousands of members, large staffs and atmospheres that are sometimes very hectic, large churches rely on systems and strategies that in some ways reflect big business. It takes strong leadership, a little luck, good people and faith, Palser said.

The focus is not the size of the church, Palser said, but on the people within it. “You can relate it to the business world where the customer is No. 1. For us, our parishioners are No. 1.

“We really try to stress that ministry to individuals,” Palser said. “We’ve tried to develop a small church feel within a big church. It’s a challenge, but we believe it’s what people want.”

With size comes benefits that speak to other needs, Palser said. The church size enables programs such as the preschool and K-8 school as well as fine arts and music programs, sports leagues and extensive youth ministries. Members frequently are searching for excellence in the programs they participate in, Palser said. “Sometimes in a small church, that’s hard to do. You don’t have the personnel.”

With a big church comes fiscal clout as well. In mid-November, Resurrection Fellowship was preparing for an annual auction that in 2001 raised $40,000. The church spent that to help feed 440 families. That amount was just a fraction of the $1.2 million contributed in 2001 to church missions, Palser said. ●

Manufactured housing becoming popular

Modern factory homes hard to distinguish from on-site-built

Chryss Cada

Forget the term “mobile home” — it’s so 26 years ago.

In fact, forget what you think you know about “manufactured homes,” which is what they’ve been called since the Federal Manufactured Home Construction and Safety Standards (commonly known as the HUD Code) went into effect June 15, 1976. The only thing mobile about most of these homes is their upwardly mobile climb in the housing market.

“No matter what you say, some people are dead-set that they’re trailer homes or mobile homes,” said Heidi Lubinski, assistant director of the Colorado Manufactured Housing Association. “But that’s just not accurate anymore and hasn’t been for some time.”

Let’s start by getting our definitions straight. According to Lubinski, there are four types of homes that fit under the title “pre-engineered.” Panelized homes are factory-built homes in which panels — a whole wall with windows, doors, wiring and outside siding — are transported to the site and assembled.

The homes must meet state or local building codes where they are sited. Pre-cut or “kit” homes are factory-built housing in which building materials are factory-cut to design specifications, transported to the site and assembled. Pre-cut homes include kit, log and dome homes. These homes must meet local, state or regional building codes.

In the case of manufactured and modular homes, units are built in a factory, transported to the site and installed. Manufactured Homes are homes built entirely in the factory under a federal building code administered by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), according to information from the Manufactured Home Construction and Safety Standards (commonly known as the HUD Code) that went into effect June 15, 1976.

Federal standards regulate

Manufactured homes may be single- or multi-section and are transported to the site and installed. The federal standards regulate manufactured housing design and construction, strength and durability, transportability, fire resistance, energy efficiency and quality. The HUD Code also sets performance standards for the heating, plumbing, air-conditioning, thermal and electrical systems. It is the only federally regulated national building code.

On-site additions, such as garages, decks and porches, often add to the attractiveness of manufactured homes and must be built to local, state or regional building codes.

Modular homes are factory-built homes built to the state, local or regional code where the home will be located. Modules are transported to the site and installed.

In 2000, one out of six new single-family housing starts were manufactured homes. According to the Census Bureau, 1999 figures show that 68 percent of new manufactured homes were located on private property, and 32 percent of new manufactured homes were located in communities

The main difference between manufactured and modular homes is structural. “A manufactured home built to HUD code is supported throughout by a steel I-beam,” Lubinski explained. “The distribution is different. A modular home built to local codes doesn’t have that same □ capacity and has to be crane-lifted onto a foundation.”

The same model of home can be built to UBC or HUD standards.

To some, “modular” is still too close to “mobile.”

“In general, you will not see a UBC home in a land-lease community,” Lubinski said. “Some people just can’t get over that image.”

Even today’s modular homes don’t look like the old mobile homes.

“They’ve really gotten away from the long hallway floor plan,” she said. “They’re more dimensional.”

Affordability is best aspect

One thing hasn’t changed: Manufactured housing is still far more affordable than on-site built homes.

In the Denver metro area, where the median new home costs $224,000, a comparable manufactured home would cost $80,000, Lubinski said.

“Of course, that figure doesn’t include land, which can be a major factor,” she said. “It’s land costs that wear on the affordability.”

Affordability is one of the major factors that bring customers to Champion Homebuilders’ factory in Berthoud.

“The advantage is you can eliminate 80 percent of your subcontractors,” said Carl Turango, operations manager for Champion. “That’s a substantial amount of time saved.”

Time is also on the side of manufactured home builders because in a factory, construction goes on all year round. But it’s a mistake to think manufactured housing is all about affordability.

“Our high-end business is what’s really booming,” Turango said.

“We just finished one home that came in with a preliminary appraisal of $650,000.”

“Our high-end business is what’s really booming.”

— Carl Turango,
Champion Homebuilders

Turango said manufacturing doesn’t mean “assembly line.”

“We build a lot of custom and semi-custom homes,” he said. “I could drive you through a subdivision in Fort Collins and you wouldn’t be able to pick out the homes that were built off-site until I pointed them out.”

Champion builders built about 800 houses last year. The majority of their homes are in the $250,000 range. The average sales price of a manufactured home was $43,600 in 1999, according to MHI. While 80 percent of Champion’s homes stay in Colorado, the remaining 20 percent are shipped to 15 different states.

“Yes, some of our home are in trailer parks, but there are also some on the golf courses and in home shows,” Turango said.

From Turango’s perspective, the future looks bright for manufactured housing.

“In my 12 years, it (manufactured housing) has really grown in popu-

You Must See It To Believe It!

Colorado Living Never Looked So Good.

Golfing. Sailing. Biking. Swimming. Fishing.

Living at Water Valley is like living on a 700-acre playground. It's so much like a vacation resort you won't believe you can actually live here. With five lakes and a trail system that winds along the Poudre River, water sports are a way of life. And the popular Pelican Lakes Golf and Country Club offers a championship course, restaurant, pool and beach volleyball... all in the Water Valley master planned community!

Part Playground. Part Nature Preserve. All Yours.

This stunning community rests on both sides of the Poudre River as it winds through the heart of a spectacular natural setting. The river banks are home to a vast menagerie of waterfowl and wildlife. Pelicans, eagles, herons, deer and fox.... you can count them among your neighbors.

Condominiums. Single-Family Homes. Patio Homes.
Townhomes. Lakefront Homes. Estate Homes.

There's a home for every kind of buyer. Within the 1,200 acre development, homes range in price from the $140's to over $1 million. So visit our playground and marvel at our nature. And remember... it's all yours for the taking!
