WE MENDED A FAILING HEART AND KEPT THEIR ROMANCE ALIVE

When you have that newlywed glow, everything seems rosy. So when Jean Richter started feeling short of breath, she wasn't initially concerned. But then her symptoms worsened and her beloved husband, Dave, had to rush her to the Foothills Hospital Emergency Department.

Jean was diagnosed with heart failure, a chronic condition that has a 50% survival rate within five years of diagnosis if not treated correctly. Luckily for Jean, Boulder Community Health had recently opened the first specialized Heart Failure Clinic in Boulder County. Dr. Scott Blois's expertise with the latest treatment options set Jean on a remarkable journey back to a full active life.

"I have a wonderful husband, five incredible daughters and 13 grandkids I adore," says Jean. "I'm so happy we can hike, travel and have fun together again."

Read Jean's story at bch.org/healinghearts or call 303-442-2395 for information about Boulder County's only Heart Failure Clinic.

Health-care pricing remains opaque

A new law enacted in January is the latest in a decade-long effort by Colorado legislators to generate more transparency in health-care pricing.

The Transparency in Health Care Prices Act, co-sponsored by state Sen. Kevin Lundberg (R-Berthoud) and state Rep. Susan Lontine (D-Denver), focuses on making it easier for people without health insurance, called self-payers, to find prices for procedures at providers in their communities.

Self-payer pricing was not addressed in legislation passed in 2008 to provide more information on medical-procedure pricing. That year, the Colorado Legislature passed a law requiring the commissioner of the Division of Insurance to develop a website that discloses pricing information for health-insurance plans reporting their average reimbursement rates. The Legislature also passed a law requiring the Colorado Hospital Association to post hospitals' average billed charges whether covered by insurance or not.

Five major providers in the Boulder Valley and Northern Colorado — UCHealth, Banner Health, Centura Health, SCL Health and Boulder Community Health, representing 12 hospitals and myriad clinics in the region — have boarded the transparency train, posting prices they all say comply with the law, and many of them had prices posted well before the Jan. 1 deadline.

Self-payers make up less than 10 percent of the state's population, but it is a group that could be increasing in numbers with the repeal of Obamacare's mandate for everyone to have insurance or pay a penalty. The percent of self-payers in Weld County is 9.6 percent; Boulder and Broomfield counties, 7.4 percent, and in Larimer County, 4.5 percent, according to a 2017 survey from the Colorado Health Institute.

The self-payer segment accounts for a small percentage of patients at hospitals. For example, UCHealth spokesman Dan Weaver said self-pay patients make up 2 percent of UCHealth patients and generate about 0.2 percent of its revenue. UCHealth operates four hospitals and several clinics in the region. Dr. Robert Vissers, president and chief executive of Boulder Community Health, which has one hospital, said self-payers make up 3 percent of its patients.

Complications and pricing

The new law acknowledges that health-care providers must charge more for a procedure if a patient encounters complications, and it doesn't require a hospital to list physician fees for a procedure, which makes up a large portion of a bill.

For example, Centura Health points out the prices on its website for self-payers don't include complicating factors or professional fees for services provided by a physician, surgeon, pathologist, anesthesiologist, radiologist, nurse practitioner or other independent practitioners. They do not include fees associated with implants, high-cost drugs or second procedures.

Nor is there a mechanism in place to monitor a provider's compliance with the law. Mark Salley, communications director for the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment, said health-care professionals and facilities are not required to submit their health-care prices to any government agency for review or approval.

"The law lays out no penalties and states CDPHE cannot do anything related to enforcement," Salley said.

And, the law does not require uniformity in reporting. It provides guidelines that lead to ambiguity: the law says a provider needs to list its most commonly diagnosed procedure — which varies from provider to provider — and suggests several different ways of determining the price.

Some providers list median prices, some average prices and some list a price range that can span up to tens of thousands of dollars. If self-payers want to take the time to visit all health-providers' sites to do some comparison shopping, they basically are out of luck.

Also, language describing a procedure varies. For example, one provider calls fluid in the lungs a pulmonary edema, another calls it fluid gathering in the lungs. The different names could lead someone to wonder if it is the same condition. Some procedures carry names that are understood only by physicians and administrators, such as "ESOPHAGITIS GASTROENT MISC DIGEST DISORDERS W/O MCC, far from what Lundberg was hoping to achieve when he urged the use of "plain English."

Visser said the law may not achieve all its goals, but he is supportive of the effort, calling it "a good early step."

Julie Lonborg, the Colorado Hospital Association's vice president of communication and media relations, said the most recently enacted law was designed to give patients, or self-payers, within a community a view of charges for a hospital's most common procedures.

"This bill wasn't designed to provide consumers a review of prices across all hospitals for the same service," she said. "There is already a tool that does that as required by legislation passed in 2008."

That report, called the Hospital Price Report, is on the CHA's website at cha.fhsclearquote.com. Users can select a hospital, or hospitals, and then a procedure from a drop down menu to see an average charge as well as average length of stay in the hospital for a particular procedure.

Mystery and confusion

Mystery and confusion surrounds any attempt to glean a fixed price for a procedure because each procedure can take a turn on the operating table requiring additional resources to treat a patient. Because of that, hospital administrators say it's impossible to set fixed prices.

UCHealth's Weaver said the law requiring providers to post prices could add to an already confusing landscape.

"Because of the complexity of pricing, it's possible the self-pay prices we have posted on our website might increase confusion," Weaver said. "UCHealth supports greater transparency and sharing more information about prices with patients. However, I think estimates can best be provided on an individual basis with patients so that specifics like a patient's copayment, coinsurance, deductible, out-of-pocket maximum and eligibility for financial assistance can be evaluated."

BCH's Visser said the best path to understanding what a procedure is going to cost is for patients to have that discussion with their primary-care physician. Vissers said the doctor and patient can discuss who might be the best provider or which location might be best-suited for a specific medical service. Armed with information from the primary-care physician, patients can check with their insurance companies regarding their specific financial responsibility, he said.

Many hospitals provide their own financial-assistance programs to aid those who qualify. But hospitals try to make it clear on their websites that patients should ask about their programs.

The law requests the pre-discounted price. Some hospitals post prices with a discount already included.

The value factor

Administrators believe that level of quality their hospitals provide should be a key factor in choosing a hospital or physician, not just a price, but value is something that is not easily quantified.

“Factors such as third-party accreditations or enhanced ability to care for higher acuity cases in addition to pricing information can help ensure that a person gets the best possible care for their health needs, said Britta Robinson, communications manager for Good Samaritan Medical Center in Lafayette.

Mark Carley, vice president of managed care and payor relations for Centura Health, said the hospital system is on board the transparency train.

“We support the state’s efforts and believe our transparency strategy addresses the key components of the bill and more. ... Part of our efforts include evolving our transparency strategies to provide consumers with meaningful information that helps to inform their decision on where to receive care.”

Added work for staffers

In complying with the law, hospitals generally have asked existing employees to generate the lists for their websites.

Rich Sheehan, a spokesman for BCH, said it took six employees about 20 hours to make the initial list, but it’s unclear what the cost will be to maintain the site.

Sara Quale, public relations director for Banner Health, said the health system operates five hospitals in Colorado along with many physician clinics and ambulatory surgery centers.

Hospital prices

This chart shows prices for common procedures at major hospitals in the Boulder Valley and Northern Colorado. Three major hospitals in the region - UCHHealth Broomfield, UCHHealth Longs Peak and Banner Health Fort Collins are not listed because they opened after the most recent data set posted. The prices here were last updated July 2017 and represent 2016 pricing.

“Each required separate listings, and that was a significant undertaking,” she said. Banner created a team of employees from finance, information technology, public relations and government relations to work on the project.

Hospitals’ staffs for the past 10 years have been gathering data on prices charged to patients per procedure and supplying it to the Colorado Hospital Association for its pricing website.

Lonborg said the association’s data-analyst staff converts the raw data from hospitals to a comparison chart on its website. She said new prices are posted once a year, generally in July, that reflect prices charged during the previous year. Many hospitals are voluntarily providing the CHA with emergency room prices, and some are also providing that information on their websites, information not required by the latest law.

DENVER — Health-care costs continue to rise, triggering acute pains not only in consumers' wallets but in Colorado's state budgets as well. Again this legislative session, lawmakers are seeking ways to control the bleeding.

As a portion of the state's budget, expenses related to health care climbed from 19 percent in fiscal year 2000 to 35 percent for this fiscal year.

"Certainly we know health-care costs are exorbitant," said Kevin Unger, president and chief executive of Poudre Valley Hospital in Fort Collins and Medical Center of the Rockies in Loveland, "A lot of times when we pass on discounts, it doesn't hit the consumer. There are a lot of people in the food chain. Because we're providing care 24-7, there are costs there just in case someone needs it."

Speaking in Greeley in January at BizWest's annual Economic Forecast event, Unger said new laws at both the federal and state levels are changing the way medicine is practiced. Health-care exchanges likely will extend over state lines, he said, and legislation will force greater transparency in pricing with the goal of encouraging patients to shop for the best value when seeking treatment.

"When hospitals post prices on their websites, that's a step in the right direction," he said, although "the tricky part is that the price paid depends on the patient's insurance company."

Attempts to rein in costs resulted in a mixed bag during last year's session of Colorado's General Assembly, Unger said, pointing to lawmakers' unsuccessful attempts to address high insurance costs for state employees.

He also noted passage of Senate Bill 267, the voluminous provisions of which included reversing a proposed budget move that would have reduced the hospital provider fee by $264 million in an effort to balance the budget. The bill reclassified that fee, which is assessed on hospital stays, as an enterprise fund to pull it out from under a constitutional revenue cap set by the Taxpayer's Bill of Rights. The change lets the state address several needs including shoring up rural hospitals.

In the 2018 session, lawmakers are tackling several other areas where costs could be trimmed.

Free-standing emergency rooms: Lawmakers have been flooded with consumer complaints in recent years about receiving big bills for minor treatments at free-standing ERs, which have tripled in number in the state since 2014 and can charge as much as 13 times more for care than at urgent-care centers, according to a 2016 study by the Center for Improving Value in Health Care.

SB 146, sponsored by Sens. John Kefalas, D-Fort Collins, and Jim Smallwood, R-Parker, would require health-care facilities not

“When hospitals post prices on their websites, that’s a step in the right direction. The tricky part is that the price paid depends on the patient’s insurance company.”

Kevin Unger, president and chief executive of Poudre Valley Hospital in Fort Collins and Medical Center of the Rockies in Loveland attached to hospitals to give patients a written disclosure that they’re an emergency facility, not an urgent-care or primary-care center. Patients also would get a list of fees and the ER’s prices for treating the 25 most common conditions. A clause requiring the ERs to provide a list of which types of health insurance they accept was removed.

Opponents noted that the term “non-emergency” on the fee schedule could lead insurers to deny payment of claims, and that the disclosures could conflict with provisions of the federal Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act, which bars health-care facilities from doing anything that could push away patients seeking emergency treatment.

The bill was carried in the House of Representatives by Reps. Lang Sias, R-Arvida, and Jonathan Singer, D-Longmont.

Over-prescribing: SB 22, introduced by Sens. Jack Tate, R-Parker, and Irene Aguilar, D-Denver, and Reps. Brittany Petterson and Chris Kennedy, both D-Lakewood, would restrict the number of pills a health-care provider can prescribe to a seven-day supply, in hopes of preventing patients from accumulating unused pills that could be found and abused by others. Exceptions would include medications for patients who have chronic pain that lasts for three months or longer. Opponents argue that the restriction is unfair to rural patients who have to travel long distances to a pharmacy.

Privacy and disclosure: House Bill 1207 would require hospitals to disclose financial information to the state’s Department of Health Care Policy and Financing, to be compiled into an annual report. HB 1128 would update requirements for notification of data breaches and outline a disposal process for paper and electronic documents.

Opioid epidemic: Unger predicted in January that the General Assembly would address treatment and prevention of opioid addiction, acting on recommendation of a study committee that met last summer. The results include HB 1007, which would require health benefit plans to restrict certain opioid prescriptions in ways similar to the provisions of SB 22; HB 1136, which would make substance-abuse disorder services eligible for the state’s Medicaid program; SB 24, which would provide $2.5 million in grants for substance-abuse providers in underserved areas; and SB 40, which would make liability protection available to facilities that provide clean syringes. A permanent committee of lawmakers would monitor the opioid-addiction issue and recommend changes if HB 1003 were passed.

Newborn screening: HB 1006 would modernize state law regarding screening of newborn babies leaving hospitals or birthing centers. The facilities would pay a $4 fee for each baby to the state public health department to enable it to establish a program for early detection of such congenital conditions as impaired hearing.

Community colleges will add BSN degree

BY DALLAS HELTZELL

news@bizwest.com

Colorado suffers from an acute case of a nursing deficiency, and its community colleges will now be able to provide a cure, thanks to legislation passed this year.

Last year saw 21,000 job listings for registered nurses with a bachelor's degree, and 80 percent of those were for entry-level positions, said Nancy McCallin, president of the Colorado Community College system, which includes the Front Range Community College campuses in Fort Collins, Loveland, Longmont and Brighton.

At least 500 positions requiring a bachelor of science in nursing degree go unfilled each year in Colorado, which would have resulted in a cumulative shortage of 4,500 nurses with BSNs by 2024 if something wasn't done.

"If there isn't a workforce shortage here," McCallin said, "I don't know what is. Hospitals are having to hire traveling nurses from out of state," she said, adding that if they obtain their degrees somewhere else, "that money's going out of state, and it raises health-care costs in Colorado.

"We believe we can be a piece of the solution and help alleviate that huge, huge shortage."

The prescription: House Bill 1086, a nursing-education bill that would let community colleges offer the four-year nursing degree that hospitals increasingly are requiring instead of just a two-year associate's degree that leads to licensure as a registered nurse. Work toward a BSN includes leadership and management training that's not part of the two-year RN program, and a BSN also is required if a nurse wants to get a graduate degree and teach.

The state's major public universities offer four-year BSN programs, as do the public Colorado Mesa University in Grand Junction and Glenwood Springs-based Colorado Mountain College, as well as the private Colorado Christian and Regis universities, but McCallin said "our tuition for the program would be about

$26,000, whereas Mesa is about $45,000 and the private institutions run anywhere from $65,000 to $175,000.

“We know we can do it affordably,” she said.

“Our colleges have made significant investments in state-of-the-art equipment and simulation labs to create robust nursing programs that we can scale to offer four-year BSN degrees,” she said. “Thus, this legislation provides a cost-effective way to expand the number of BSN nursing graduates in Colorado. Our colleges already educate and train high-quality registered nurses who greatly contribute to the health and well-being of their communities. Allowing us to offer bachelor of science degrees in nursing is the smart thing to do to address the overwhelming shortage of bachelor-prepared nurses.”

The legislature agreed and passed HB 1086. Gov. John Hickenlooper, however, did not agree but did permit the bill to become law without his signature.

HB 1086 was born in Colorado Springs through discussions between Memorial Hospital and Pikes Peak Community College. CU officials testified against the measure when it was being heard in the House in February, and Colorado Mesa, Regis and Colorado Christian also expressed opposition.

Especially for officials at CU’s School of Nursing and Anschutz Medical Center, the issue was “mission creep,” but McCallin said the BSN program would clearly follow the community college system’s mission of addressing workforce issues.

“We have made a number of compromises they felt were good,” she said. “It limits us to doing RN-to-BSN completion programs as opposed to a traditional BSN, where a student goes to the same school for four years. We agreed that we’d accept into our BSN program only those who already had an RN.

“It’s a much more detailed prescriptive process, which is something none of the other four-year nursing programs have to go through,” she said. “It’s to assure we did not compete with the four-year institutions, but it allows us to add capacity to the system.”

The law applies only to the Colorado Community College system, the state’s largest system of higher education, serving 137,000 students annually at 13 colleges and 39 locations across Colorado.

McCallin said she called Dr. Leah Bornstein, president of Aims Community College in Greeley, about being included in the legislation, but “she was not interested in being in the bill at this time. She felt what they had going with UNC was working well.”

Aims partners with the University of Northern Colorado for its bachelor’s in nursing program, said Laura Coale, executive director of communication and public information for Aims. Last spring saw the first graduating class from that collaboration, she said.

HB 1086 hit a snag in late February over what authority the Colorado Commission on Higher Education would have over the program. Colorado Mesa had backed a bill last year that stripped CCHE of its authority to approve new or modified degree programs, but this year lawmakers were urged to require community colleges to seek CCHE approval.

“I am a firm believer that market competition is essential to minimize costs and maximize benefits to Colorado’s health-care consumers,” said bill sponsor Rep. Paul Lundeen, R-Monument. “There’s a demand for nurses with BSN degrees, and we should let the market respond. This policy will help level the playing field, and ensure that Colorado’s nursing students have additional options for their education that are accessible and affordable.”

Good Sam treatment targets liver cancer

BY ELIZABETH GOLD
news@bizwest.com

LAFAYETTE—In January, Good Samaritan Medical Center completed its first procedure that uses a specific type of high level radiation to treat a patient with colorectal cancer that has spread to the liver.

The radioembolization procedure delivers a radioactive isotope directly into tumors in the liver. It has shown promise for treating liver cancer with reduced side effects of traditional treatments like chemotherapy, for helping patients maintain a higher quality of life and for potentially helping extend the length of their lives.

The procedure, which has been approved since the early 2000s, has gained a lot of attention for cancers that originate in or have spread to the liver, according to Dr. Rajan Gupta, medical director of interventional radiology at Good Samaritan Medical Center. Because the treatment uses the radioactive isotope yttrium, it is referred to as Y-90.

Gupta collaborated with Dr. Emerson Sharpe and the interventional radiology and nuclear medicine team to complete the minimally invasive procedure in January at Good Samaritan. The treatment is considered when there is a limited possibility for tumors in the liver to be surgically removed, and a patient isn't responding to chemo.

"There are about 300 centers in the U.S. that do this and five to 10 in Colorado," Gupta said. Using Y-90 requires an institutional license because nuclear pharmaceuticals are highly regulated.

Good Samaritan received the license in December about eight months after starting the process. "An authorized user is required to order a dose," Gupta said. Since successfully completing the first procedure in January, four more Y-90 treatments have already been scheduled.

Amy Kreeger, nurse practitioner for interventional radiology, worked with Gupta and Sharpe and the team to get this first patient ready for the Y-90 procedure. She described the patient as nervous initially but doing well now. Lab work and scans will be done three months after the procedure to determine results.

"We had to work with the state to get the license and had in-services to get procedures mapped out and ready to go,” Kreeger said. She also helped train the staff on the process.

Cancer is the second leading cause of death in the United States, and colorectal cancer is the second leading cause of those cancer-related deaths according to the U.S. Cancer Statistics Working Group. In a broader study, liver cancer is the leading cause of cancer deaths worldwide, according to the American Cancer Society.

Research shows that the primary site where certain cancers originate often determines the pattern the cells will follow if they spread in a body. The relationship between colorectal cancer and liver cancer is that the liver is one of the earlier and most common places colorectal cancer spreads, according to Gupta.

“Chemo is a fairly effective mode of treatment but each round can be less effective,” he said. “Y-90 in colorectal cancer is effective when chemo isn’t controlling the liver disease.”

Another advantage is that the procedure spares tissue that’s not targeted. Through the process, microscopic hollow spheres are placed inside the blood vessels that feed a tumor to block the supply of blood to the cancer cells. When Y-90 fills the spheres, they get lodged at the tumor site and deliver a high dose of radiation to the tumor and not to normal tissues.

Whereas Y-90 treatment was originally delivered to patients who were hospitalized, it is now a two- or three-step outpatient procedure. Step one involves mapping out arteries to the liver from the groin area.

After evaluating information from the diagnostic tracer, doctors determine the proper Y-90 dose and deliver it at the next outpatient appointment. If another dose is required to target additional tumors, another appointment is set.

Some people may feel fatigue and low-grade flu symptoms afterward but it doesn’t make them feel sick like chemo can.

A global study looked at the potential benefit for Y-90 to be given earlier in liver cancer treatment as a first-line procedure like chemo. “The study showed it was well tolerated and safe and controlled cancer in the liver but it didn’t improve overall survival,” Gupta said.

Each dose of Y-90 costs about $15,000, he said. “Chemo and particle therapy (a form of external beam radiotherapy) are effective in a handful of treatments—they’re cheaper but more toxic and negatively affect quality of life.”

“Emerging data shows that this has a well-established role for people who aren’t responding to chemo,” Gupta said. “As data comes out over the next five years, I think we’ll be using this more and more to help people and to help them maintain quality of life.”

Currently Y-90 is used only when cancer is in or has spread to the liver. There’s very little data for using it on other cancers at this point, according to Gupta.

In February 2000, President Bill Clinton dedicated March as National Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month.

BCH integrates behavioral, physical health

JONATHAN CASTNER FOR BIZWEST

BY ELIZABETH GOLD
news@bizwest.com

Dr. Monica Bartoli, standing, talks with Julie Jungman, a licensed clinical social worker, who work at the same clinic within Boulder Community Health.

BOULDER — Treatment for mental health care continues to lag in the U.S. The Affordable Care Act has increased access to insurance for more people, however, getting treatment for issues like depression and anxiety can still be a challenge.

Programs at the federal and state level are focusing on filling in the gaps. Locally, Boulder Community Health's integrated behavioral health team is working to make it easier for clinic patients to get the help they need. The two-fold focus aims to improve physical health by improving mental health.

Boulder Community Health runs 11 primary care clinics in the areas of Boulder, Lafayette, Superior, Longmont, and Broomfield. Each has some level of integrated behavioral care available onsite, according to Julie Jungman, integrated behavioral health supervisor. A group of seven clinical social workers is spread over the 11 clinics.

"Sometimes a doctor will bring me into the exam room for a quick conversation," Jungman said. "It could be that the patient wants to talk about insomnia, and I can tell them a few things to try."

In addition to these warm hand-off interventions, a patient can come into the clinic and see Jungman or one of the other social workers for up to three sessions of solution-focused therapy.

"It's based on things a person can do to make their life less stressful — common strategies like exercising by setting up goals and action steps," she said. "People can be referred for any behavior that can be strategized to improve their quality of life."

The integrated behavioral team can be called in by a primary care provider to help patients work with issues like diabetes, weight loss and smoking cessation through behavioral goals and support. Depression and anxiety tend to be common struggles patients present.

"For any chronic illness, it's not unusual for depression to go hand-in-hand,” said Betsy Duckett, director of integrated clinical services at BCH. “You can’t take care of your diabetes unless you treat your depression. We want to meet mental health needs to be able to better address physical health needs.”

To get to the heart of what a patient needs to be able to work with challenges like diabetes, for example, the integrated behavioral social worker could ask questions to get a bigger picture. Inquiring about the kind of social activities a person is involved in or what they do to manage their stress can help collect information that the primary care provider can follow-up on and vice versa.

“It’s great when a doctor tells you to lose 20 pounds,” Duckett said, but the directive can be overwhelming to a patient. When the integrated behavioral health professional asks the patient to outline steps they can take to lose five or 10 pounds and then have them check back in a month, the directive becomes an attainable goal.

The integrated behavioral health initiative started in BCH clinics four years ago and spread to all of its 11 clinics by 2017. The integrated behavioral team also provides assistance beyond meeting with patients when their primary care provider asks them to step in during a visit and short term follow-ups.

“People who have depression and anxiety can be daunted by the idea of finding a psychiatrist or provider,” Jungman said. “We help them navigate by helping them figure out who’s in their network and recommending three to four people in the community we think are a good fit.”

Monica Bartoli, D.O., is a family medicine physician in BCHs Northwest Family medicine clinic in Superior. One of Jungman’s tasks sometimes includes reaching out to patients Bartoli has seen about two weeks after the appointment to find out how a medication change is affecting them.

“For me, it’s helpful knowing how my patients are doing two weeks after care in case we need to change medications or make adjustments early on rather than waiting for their next appointment in six weeks,” Bartoli said. “It used to be that we would give referrals to patients for mental health care and then let them loose. This bridges the gap for patients who don’t know how to navigate the system.”

The integrated behavioral health program in BCH clinics is rooted in a few national concepts and programs. One, the Advanced Primary Care model, focuses on building closer connections between primary care and other clinical care as well as community-based services.

Patient-Centered Medical Home is a care delivery model where a person’s primary care physician coordinates treatment to ensure that necessary care is arranged when and where the patient needs it and in a manner they can understand.

The State Innovation Models (SIM) initiative provides federal grants to states and focuses on lowering healthcare costs, providing better care and improving population health.

SIM is “devoting resources to demonstrate the link between addressing mental health issues and improved physical health, which is difficult to do at the practice level,” said Jamie Jensen, chief population health officer and vice president of strategy at BCH.

BCH received $5,000 for a two-year involvement and about $40,000 for each clinic site. The dollars have helped cover a group visit room, a behavioral health specialist position, IT enhancements to better understand its patients needs and more.
