Partnering to Create and Care for the Healthiest Community in the Nation

From the earliest days of caring for our neighbors, creating a healthy community was our goal.

A century later, we're proud that Boulder is ranked among the healthiest communities in our nation.

Whether it's a pandemic or seasonal epidemics,

Whether it's bringing new lives into the world or saving lives with unequalled care...

We are Boulder Community Health. We are Boulder.

New program gives employers health insurance option

BY DALLAS HELTZELL

News@bizwest.com

Data remains sparse on how well a new program that gives employers a way to keep their health care spending at a fixed dollar amount is working and how many businesses are participating. But the region's providers of health care options for businesses say they are seeing increased interest.

Individual Coverage Health Reimbursement Arrangements (ICHRA), known as "ick-ruhs," became available in 2020 after being created in 2019 under regulations passed by the Trump administration in 2019. They allow employers of any size to reimburse their employees for some or all of the premiums that their employees pay for health coverage they buy themselves.

"There is a lot of education needed to ensure that employers and brokers understand them," said Brian Blase, president of health-policy think tank Paragon Health Institute, who testified about the program Feb. 17 before the House Education and Labor Subcommittee on Health, Employment, Labor and Pensions. "Moreover," he added, "migration to individual coverage HRAs has been affected by employers' understandable focus on weathering the pandemic as well as a general risk aversion to changing employee benefits in such a tight labor market."

However, Blase said, "individual coverage HRAs will help employers attract and retain employees, gain greater predictability over their health costs, and reduce administrative expenses, allowing them to better concentrate on their core business purpose. The rule should help reverse the decline in small employers that offer coverage to their workers. Moreover, the rule contains significant flexibility for larger employers to offer coverage to part-time workers or hourly workers."

ICHRAs differ from previous implementation rules under the Affordable Care Act that said employers couldn't reimburse employees for individual market premiums. Large employers can use them to satisfy the ACA's employer mandate as long as the benefit is big enough to make an individual health plan affordable. Affordability uses the same percentage of income that applies to employer group plans but is calculated based on the price of the lowest-cost "silver" plan in a state's health care marketplace after the ICHRA benefit is subtracted from the total.

According to Internal Revenue Service regulations, "an ICHRA is affordable if the remaining amount an employee has to pay for a self-only silver plan on the exchange is less than 9.83% of the employee's household income."

Under the new rules, employers must offer either a group health plan or an ICHRA to a class of employees; they can't give their workers a choice. They can be used to reimburse workers for qualified medical expenses in addition to premiums.

"As of Jan. 1, 2020, employers have been able to provide tax-preferred contributions through an individual coverage HRA, which their employees can use to purchase the individual market plan that work best for them," Blase said. "Most employers that offer health insurance provide workers only with a single option, so the HRA rule has the potential to significantly increase worker choice and control over their health insurance. Employees are currently limited to purchasing ACA-compliant plans in the individual market, although Congress could permit employees to use their HRAs to purchase a broader set of plans."

Employees have to buy individual health insurance to participate in the ICHRA, or can be covered by Medicare Parts A and B or Medicare Part C. The business chooses a monthly allowance of tax-free money to make available to employees; that allowance is the maximum amount the business will pay out in reimbursements.

The advantages of ICHRA include the fact that it's free of payroll tax for both the business and its employees, and available to businesses of all sizes. Unlike traditional group insurance, there are no minimum participation requirements and no maximum contribution limits, and businesses don't need to act as a middleman between employees and insurance companies.

There are some disadvantages, however. It doesn't provide benefits to employees who are uninsured or those on a spouse's group plan, and businesses will need to retain an ICHRA administrator because otherwise they would have to create their own plan documents, handle employee reimbursement requests and keep up with changes in regulations on their own. The set monthly allowance rolls over into the next month if it's unused, but resets at the end of the year.

ICHRAs represent a big change for workers who are used to having their portion of a health-insurance premium taken out of their paychecks while their employer pays its portion directly to the insurance company. With an ICHRA, the workers pay the entire premium themselves and then are reimbursed — an initial out-of-pocket cost that could put a strain on some cash-strapped employees. Still, to get a reimbursement is a simple process: The employee submits a receipt and gets paid back up to his or her accrued allowance amount after the employer verifies and approves it.

Region shows rich mix of health care innovations

BY DALLAS HELTZELL

News@bizwest.com

When medical-device manufacturer Medtronic consolidates some of its Louisville and Gunbarrel activities into a new campus in Lafayette late this year, it will mark another milestone in the region's growing role in health care innovation.

From ventilators that have been in high demand during the COVID-19 pandemic to robotic surgical devices, prosthetic limbs, diagnostic tools and even tracking viruses in wastewater, companies in the Boulder Valley and Northern Colorado are producing life-saving solutions that also generate economy-boosting jobs.

Medtronic (NYSE: MDT), which just earned a lofty spot on Fortune magazine's "Most Admired Companies" list, is building a 400,000-square-foot laboratory and office complex spanning two five-story buildings near U.S. Highway 287 and Dillon Road, where around 1,100 employees will work on some of the Dublin, Ireland-based corporation's health care devices including ventilators, brain and spinal implants, tiny pacemakers and more.

Already this year, the company has received two major product approvals from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

In January, the FDA approved two Medtronic devices for spinal-cord stimulation therapy for treating chronic pain resulting from diabetic peripheral neuropathy. And in mid-February, Medtronic won expanded approval for its Freezor and Freezor Xtra catheters for pediatric treatment of a common, life-threatening heart rhythm condition; the flexible, single-use devices freeze cardiac tissue and block unnecessary electrical signals within the heart.

The company also is touting Hugo, its robotic-assisted surgery system, targeting urologic and gynecologic procedures. The system is first being marketed in Europe, where only about 2% of surgeries are performed robotically, but eventually will come to the United States after FDA approval expected this year. Hugo has a surgeon console and cart-mounted independent robotic arms that mainly are used to hold surgical instruments and are designed to mimic the movements of a surgeon's hands at the console.

Meanwhile, Bolder Surgical in Louisville, which is being acquired by Marlborough, Massachusetts-based Hologic Inc. (Nasdaq: HOLX), makes tools for sealing blood vessels as well as devices for other surgical procedures. It was founded as JustRight Surgical LLC in 2010, focusing on pediatric patients, but rebranded in 2019 to broaden its approach. Hologic focuses on early detection and treatment in women's health in diagnostics, surgical and medical imaging products. As of two years ago, its robotic surgical tools were in use in more than 200 hospitals across the United States.

Wolf Robotics in Fort Collins builds parts and robotic systems for medical equipment manufacturers, and has grown to be one of the largest general-manufacturing robot integrators in North America with more than 8,500 robot system installations around the world.

Boulder-based Encision Inc., founded in 1991, has developed a line of instruments for laparoscopic surgery that eliminate the risk of energy burns. Invitae, founded in Boulder in 2013, develops tests that detect genetic variations associated with cancers and inherited disease.

Windsor-based Quorum Prosthetics, a 23-year-old company that has been a BizWest Innovation Quotient Awards honoree, builds custom made, 3D-printed prosthetic sockets that are easier for the wearer to put on and remove. Its founder and owner, Joe Johnson, knows how important a well-fitting prosthetic device is, since he wears a prosthetic leg below his knee following an accident that led to an amputation.

The COVID-19 pandemic provided an opportunity for Fort Collins-based GT Molecular, which was created in 2018 to develop molecular detection technology for cancer research, to focus those tools on the detection of SARS-CoV-2 in wastewater three times faster than previous methods, allowing public-health officials to take faster action in addressing surges of the virus.

Boulder-based Aspero Medical, spun off from research at the University of Colorado Boulder and a finalist for BizWest's IQ Award for life sciences, used Small Business Innovation Research grants to develop devices including an endoscopic balloon with more grip and a solution it says will transition more than 15% of incomplete colonoscopies to fully screened procedures at a fraction of the cost of a colonoscopy.

Longmont-based LumenAstra Inc. also is partnering with CU researchers to develop an accurate, wearable, non-invasive device for measurement of internal body temperatures. In her Radio Frequency Lab at the university, Dr. Zoya Popovic and her students adapted technologies usually used to measure the temperature of stars thousands of light years away and turned it into a way to look deep into the human body.

An IQ Award winner for most innovative health-care product in 2017, Louisville-based Eximis Surgical has tested the performance of its surgical devices with the aid of grants it got with the help of technology incubator Innosphere, which guided it through the grant-application steps and introduced the company to key individuals at Colorado State University and UHealth's Northern Colorado research department.

With Innosphere's help, even more locally produced health-care innovation is on the way.

Innosphere Ventures, the Colorado BioScience Association and Colorado BioScience Institute are launching a new program to grow life-sciences startups with support from the state of Colorado's Office of Economic Development and International Trade. That program joins Ascent, a new accelerator for deep-tech startups from Venture Partners at CU Boulder.

LYONS — A company that prides itself on its roots in the organic, natural world, its commitment to philanthropy and the B Corp sector, and to family operations expects all that to continue even though the company has just been acquired by an international company.

Sierra Sage Herbs LLC, makers of Green Goo, Good Goo and Southern Butter, was purchased just last month for $21 million by Australian cannabis and hemp company Creso Pharma Limited (ASX: CPH, OTC: COPHF, FRA: 1X8). The purchase, as announced Feb. 7, gives Creso entry to the U.S. market and gives Sierra Sage the resources to take its product line worldwide.

“We’re in it for the long term,” said Sierra CEO Jodi Scott. Scott, along with her sister Jen Scott and mother Kathy Scott founded the company in 2008 and moved it to Lyons in 2013, where it plans to stay. Jodi Scott continues at the helm and now sits on the Creso board as well.

“Oftentimes entrepreneurs get to this stage, and they feel threatened to preserve [what they’ve built], she said. “I’ve been researching this for years, long before it was time to exit. You don’t want to wait until you consider the end, and then determine what the exit will look like,” she advised others who might find themselves in a similar situation. “Get to know the players in the industry. Hopefully you’ll have an opportunity to partner with like-minded people, because you’re not rushed into it,” she said. “Our DNA has not been compromised.”

“We’ll take all three of our brands and do all the things that we had hoped and dreamed but haven’t been able to do,” she said. “Big companies can’t be nimble with product development. Creso gives us big business tools but we bring small business agility. It’s a perfect recipe for accelerated growth.”

Sierra Sage is a classic built-from-scratch company that found the right formula to produce wholesome products that attracted the attention of major retailers around the country. It all started when Jen Scott was studying in California to be an herbalist. She and her husband moved to Idaho where she experimented with combining herbs with natural plant oils to create salves to sell at farmers markets.

Jodi, who lived in Texas and worked in health care, and Kathy, a web designer and video content creator in Colorado Springs, would join Jen to help with production and sales.

Their products, marketed as natural first-aid creams and salves, worked and started getting attention. In 2012, they received their first order from a health food store. In 2015, their products were included in gift bags at the Oscars, and they attended their first Outdoor Retailer trade show, an event now held in Denver.

“When Sierra Sage became more than a hobby, we decided we needed to be in the same place,” Jodi said. They immediately settled on Lyons, a Colorado town that had become the home of Jodi’s boyfriend and later husband.

“We met at a campsite in Summit County,” she related. When her boyfriend moved to Lyons, she visited there and fell in love with the community. “Our heart has always been here; we wanted to raise our children here. We wanted to infusion standpoint and an absorption standpoint,” so that the salves can be easily absorbed through the skin. The oils are GMO and gluten free.

The company’s proprietary methods and combinations of herbs and oils produce salves “each with a unique blend designed for symptom relief.”

The products can be found at health food and supplement stores but also are widely distributed at Walmart, Target, Kroger, Albertsons, Safeway, Walgreens, Meyer and more. About 80% of sales are in stores and the remainder from the company’s online store.

“We were intentional in positioning ourselves not as a natural alternative. We are your best OTC [over the counter] solution on the market. Many of our consumers may not be natural consumers but they have poison ivy and are looking for a solution. And then, by the way, we’re plant based and natural. Customers who didn’t intend [to seek natural products] come over to the natural side.”

Jodi said that philanthropy is a cornerstone of the company, and not just contributions to a charity or two. The company regularly selects organizations around the world to receive cash and product donations.

“Our mission is to spread goodness — goodness on your body and throughout the world,” she said.

“It took my team a half a second to align with organizations with our sanitizer when COVID hit. Because it was an integral part of who we are, I didn’t have to spend months to pitch a concept; the team was already there.”

While at one time the company grew its own herbs used in its salves, now it sources those products from all over the world. Hemp will be processed in the U.S., but many other herbs come from Egypt, India, Africa and South America.

“Part of our vision is that we want to have more sustainable herbs. We want to avoid herbs that might be environmentally threatened. My sister is always staying on the front line of herbal properties; she’s exploring functional mushrooms right now for deodorants.”

With about 20 employees plus the founders of the company in Lyons, the company expects to continue its growth.

Jodi said sales in 2020 were about $8 million. That dropped to $5.7 million during the COVID-impacted 2021 and she expects sales this year to reach $10 million. “We’ve proven with our retailers that we can expand with them; we’re worthy of the shelf space.”

contribute to the business community, and we loved the entrepreneurial spirit that we found here,” she said.

So in 2013, the company established its headquarters in Lyons, just as the flood of 2013 was coming through.

“We started a small warehouse, then four warehouses, found an office and storefront. Then COVID happened and we recognized that we needed to be more strategic with our footprint.”

The CEO said that the company contracts out manufacturing and one of the manufacturers stepped up to help with fulfillment.

The company has five or six contract manufacturers, but its lipid infusion is performed only at one, in Utah.

Jodi said that while multiple methods can be used to draw out the medicinal qualities of herbs, Sierra Sage is partial to the use of natural, fatty oils from plants to draw out medicinal components. “It’s one of the oldest extracting tools or methods,” she said.

“All oils have a different heating element to them. We’ve identified a specific blend that will yield the highest amount of medicinal value of the plant,” she said. “The blend is important from an

Boulder Community Health to open primary care clinic in former Alfalfa's building

BY TOMMY WOOD
twood@bizwest.com

BOULDER — The former Alfalfa's building at 1645 Broadway has its first new tenant: a Boulder Community Health primary care clinic.

The 10,125-square-foot clinic will be one of four new occupants of the former organic grocery store. It will consolidate two BCH primary care clinics — Spruce Street Internal Medicine at 2575 Spruce St. and Dakota Ridge Family Medicine at 2995 Baseline Road — into one facility. Both of those had outgrown their current space, according to a BCH news release.

The new clinic will be named Anchor Point Primary Care Clinic after the Anchor Point Foundation, a charitable fund run by longtime Boulder residents Amy Batchelor and Brad Feld. The foundation recently donated $2 million to BCH to support physician and staff wellness efforts.

"This new location marks BCH's return to Broadway, where our community health system started 100 years ago," Larry Novissimo, vice president of ambulatory services for BCH, said in a prepared statement. "Both clinics have deep roots in the Boulder community, including hard-won and long reputations for excellent, patient-centered primary care. Conveniently located in West Central Boulder, our existing patients will still have ready access to the same doctors and primary care services close to home in a beautiful new location."

The clinic is being designed by Boulder-based PEH Architects and constructed by Longmont-based Golden Triangle Construction. It is expected to open in fall 2022.

The clinic will share the former Alfalfa's space with a 15,423-square-foot retail space, a 6,056-square-foot retail space and 3,959-square-foot office space. Tenants for those have yet to be named.

Alfalfa's shut down its Boulder, Longmont and Louisville locations in early 2021 as the natural grocer fell behind on rent and payments to vendors. The property is owned by B'way Property LP. According to the leak in October of Colorado Gov. Jared Polis' tax records, B'way Property LP is owned by the Polis family. The listing for the property is held by brokers Sam Zaitz, Adam Rubenstein and Sarah Alfano of international real estate services company Jones Lang LaSalle Inc.

Globetrotting pharma manager lands at Boulder's AGC

BY LUCAS HIGH

lhigh@bizwest.com

BOULDER — With only about two years on the Boulder biosciences scene, AGC Biologics Inc. is still a relative newcomer on the block, but the woman hired as general manager of the city's manufacturing facility is an industry veteran.

Regina Choi-Rivera, hired as Boulder general manager last month, joins the organization from South Korea-based life-sciences firm Samsung Biologics.

In fact, she moved from Korea to Boulder without ever having visited the city.

A self-described "Korean-born American," Choi-Rivera moved to New York City at the age of 17 before receiving both engineering bachelor's and master's degrees from the Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art in Manhattan.

She began her career in New Jersey working for Lockwood Greene Engineers before making a couple of other stops at state-side biotech companies.

Choi-Rivera then backtracked to Korea to work for Samsung Biologics, a life-sciences spinoff from the multinational conglomerate Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd.

"It was very intriguing to go back to Korea where I came from and where I still have family members living," she told BizWest. In fact, many of Choi-Rivera's close family members who had immigrated with her to the United States were back in Korea by the time she returned to the land of her birth.

"That was a driver for me to go back to Korea," she said. "But at the same time I was able to be part of a growing start-up

"As a CDMO, we're reducing the cost of pharmaceutical development and also manufacturing. We manufacture for large companies like Johnson & Johnson and Pfizer [and use competitive advantages] to make more affordable medicine for people around the world. So I have great pride in working for a CDMO."

Regina Choi-Rivera, general manager of the city's manufacturing facility from the beginning, which provided me with experience and the opportunity to learn corporate culture in Korea."

The decision to move back to the U.S. "was very personal," Choi-Rivera said, as she has three children attending college stateside.

"My family had been apart for a very long time, so it was time," she said of the decision to reunite.

At AGC in Boulder, Choi-Rivera will oversee a contract development manufacturing organization, or CDMO, which makes drugs on behalf of other pharmaceutical companies.

"As a CDMO, we're reducing the cost of pharmaceutical development and also manufacturing," she said. "We manufacture for large companies like Johnson & Johnson and Pfizer [and use competitive advantages] to make more affordable medicine for people around the world. So I have great pride in working for a CDMO"

The Boulder plant specializes in protein-based biologics, known as large-molecule therapies.

"I've worked in biopharmaceuticals for more than 25 years, and I've found that working with large molecules is very different than with small molecules as far as the culture of the business and the impact we have," Choi-Rivera said. The needs for large molecules are growing by leaps and bounds because of the effectiveness provided to the patient."

The Boulder facility "is very, very special because it's [AGC's] only facility with a 20,000-liter stainless steel bioreactor," which is about 10 times the size of the equipment in the company's other locations, which includes a plant in Longmont, she said. "That means we can provide a lot more affordable drugs and manufacture a lot quicker. AGC's Boulder site can be the growth engine for the entire AGC Biologics organization."

Choi-Rivera takes over leadership of the Boulder plant during a challenging time for the drug manufacturing industry, both from a talent recruitment and supply-chain perspective.

The operation expects to add about 50 employees per year until full build out in about 2025. At that point, the Boulder AGC operation's headcount will be around 300 workers.

Supply-chain issues, a concern for many industries, are "compounded by the need for vaccines and therapeutics" for COVID-19, which "are also manufactured in large-molecule sites," Choi-Rivera said.

"We have a lot of innovative ways we're using to get over that type of challenge," she said. For example, AGC is investing in equipment that can be used both for manufacturing COVID-19 treatments and other types of large-molecule therapies.
